The Manin is part of Milan history

Its origin goes back to XIX century when some papers reported renting contracts for a house in contrada della Cavalchina (now via Manin).

Since 1904 the Colombo family has managed it, passing through four generations.

An important added value comes from all of this: the Manin is one of the last high level hotels in Milan with family management.

In August 1943 it was totally destroyed during a night air raid on Milan.

Rebuilt in 1948, it came back bigger, beautiful and much more modern.

These life motives have been always carried on by the Colombos, in order to keep the hotel always at top level in hospitality and quality.

A good story: La Cavalchina, 1418: What is it?

"On January 29th, 1865 the building No. 1418 in Cavalchina Street (now No. 7 in Manin Street) was rented for hotel use. The rent lasted nine years, until 1874. On that date the hotel owners rented also the building No. 1419 that had been used as a private residence till then. Thus the old inn Bettolino together with the two adjacent buildings became one hotel with its main façade at No. 1418 in Cavalchina Street."

(from the diary of grandmother Carlotta Poletti Colombo)
